1 INTRODUCTION

2 The text of The National Voter Registration Act (“NVRA”), 52 U.S.C.
3 § 20501 et seq., the Help America Vote Act (“HAVA”), 52 U.S.C. § 20901 et seq.,
4 and Title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (“CRA” or “Title III”), 52 U.S.C.
5 § 20701 et seq., Congress’s intent underlying these statutes, and the case law
6 interpreting these statutes all compel the same conclusion: Plaintiff’s complaint 7 must be dismissed. The NVRA, HAVA, and CRA were each passed for the express 8 purpose of ensuring that eligible Americans can participate in free, fair, and secure 9 elections—protecting the cornerstone of America’s democracy: the right of eligible 10 citizens to vote. These statutes do not blindly permit the United States Attorney 11 General to embark on fishing expeditions into voting records or facilitate massive 12 voter-data collection by the federal government, as Plaintiff insists. Doing so would 13 be counter to these statutes’ purpose. There is no legal basis, and Plaintiff offers no 14 legitimate justification, to support its sweeping demand for California’s complete 15 unredacted voter registration file and the sensitive personal information of every 16 Californian included therein. Instead, through its Complaint, Plaintiff asks the 17 federal judiciary to grant it permission to steamroll state and federal privacy laws 18 and turn three of this nation’s preeminent voting access statutes, NVRA, HAVA, 19 and CRA on their heads, contorting them to sacrifice voter privacy protections and 20 wrongly justify the federal government’s immediate, unfettered access to voters’ 21 data. The statutes simply do not support this. Because the United States has failed 22 to state a claim upon which the relief it has requested can be granted, the Court 23 should grant Intervenor-Defendant League of Women Voters of California’s (the 24 “LWVC’s”) motion to dismiss.

ARGUMENT

I. THE UNITED STATES FAILS TO STATE A LEGAL CLAIM UNDER THE NVRA

Plaintiff's Complaint demands data beyond the scope of relief that the NVRA authorizes. Compl. ¶¶ 12–21, 34, 50–56 [Dkt. 1]. What the United States wants—access to particular statutorily-protected sensitive voter information—is unnecessary to ensure California is conducting “a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters” and lies beyond the statute’s reach. Project Vote, Inc. v. Kemp, 208 F. Supp. 3d 1320, 1325 (N.D. Ga. 2016) (citing 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(3)-(4)); id. at 1345 (holding that personal information like social security numbers and birth dates “is not relevant . . . to determine whether the State improperly removed or did not add individuals to the voter roll”); id. at 1344 (“Section 8(i) requires the disclosure of individual voter registration records, but it does not require the disclosure of sensitive information that implicates special privacy concerns”); Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. Bellows, 92 F.4th 36, 56 (1st Cir. 2024) (“nothing in the text of the NVRA prohibits the appropriate redaction of uniquely or highly sensitive personal information in the Voter File”). The NVRA claim must therefore be dismissed.

Plaintiff fails to counter consistent NVRA case law that recognizes redactions of sensitive voter information are appropriate. Instead, it argues that those cases are distinguishable because they involve private actions, offering no textual analysis of the statute and no reasoning to support a distinction between private requesters and the Attorney General. Opp’n to Defs.’ MTD at 7, 12-14 [Dkt. 63]; Opp’n to Intervenors’ MTD at 12-14 [Dkt. 81]. Nor could it. The NVRA’s public disclosure provision requires states to make records “available for public inspection.” 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i). It contains no reference whatsoever to the identity of the requester. To support its argument, the United States cherry-picks quotes from cases discussing the CRA’s Attorney General inspection provision.

1 Opp'n to Intervenors' MTD at 12-13 [Dkt. 81]. But none of these quotes support 2 the argument that the Attorney General has broader access under the NVRA. In 3 Kemp, the court cited the CRA precisely to make the opposite point: other federal 4 statutes, including the CRA, also “recognize the confidentiality of certain voter 5 information.” 208 F. Supp. 3d at 1344; see also True the Vote v. Hosemann, 43 F.
6 Supp. 3d 693, 734-35 (S.D. Miss. 2014) (noting that an interpretation allowing 7 NVRA requesters access to unredacted voter records “flies in the face of” the CRA, 8 which requires the Attorney General to keep such records confidential). The court 9 then concluded that “[a]llowing disclosure [under the NVRA] of unredacted voter 10 applications is inconsistent [] with Congress’s concern for individual privacy 11 evidenced in Federal statutes” and that “it is illogical that in enacting the NVRA, 12 Congress intended to erode Federal and State law protecting against the disclosure 13 of private, personal information.” Kemp, 208 F. Supp. 3d at 1344-45.

14 The United States also argues that Intervenor-Defendants seek to expand the 15 text of the NVRA by adding a redaction provision. Opp'n to Intervenors' MTD at 16 11 [Dkt. 81]. That misstates both Intervenor-Defendant LWVC's position and the 17 case law. Courts have recognized the distinction between making a record 18 available—which the NVRA requires and the State has agreed to do—and 19 redacting limited, discrete confidential information within those records—which 20 multiple, preexisting federal and state laws mandate. Hosemann, 43 F. Supp. 3d at 21 733-34. The Plaintiff cites no authority suggesting that Congress intended 22 otherwise protected information to lose its protection once a citizen registers to 23 vote. To the contrary, such a reading would undermine a central purpose of the 24 NVRA: to “increase the number of eligible citizens who register to vote in 25 elections.” 52 U.S.C. § 20501(b)(1). Properly read, the NVRA mandates 26 disclosure, but did not silently repeal parallel state and federal privacy protections.
27 See Kemp, 208 F. Supp. 3d at 1345 (holding Congress did not intend to undermine 28 state privacy laws and citing Georgia’s public records law exemptions as an

1 example); Whitman v. Am. Trucking Associations, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001)
2 (Congress “does not . . . hide elephants in mouseholes”); see also Bellows, 92 F.
3 4th at 55-56 (federal privacy and voter intimidation statutes must be “read in 4 tandem with the NVRA” to “address the privacy concerns posed by public 5 disclosure of the Voter File”). Indeed, the United States itself recognizes the 6 continuing force of privacy law, admitting that the federal Privacy Act applies to 7 its own conduct. Opp’n to Intervenors’ MTD at 13-14 [Dkt. 81]. The same principle 8 applies here: state privacy laws may shape the scope of disclosure without 9 enlarging—or contradicting—the text of the NVRA.

10 For this reason, the United States is also wrong to maintain that California’s 11 voter-privacy safeguards are preempted by the NVRA. Opp’n to Intervenors’ MTD 12 at 16-18 [Dkt. 81]. While a state law that fully prevented the disclosure of voter 13 records would be at least partially preempted by the NVRA, see Bellows, 92 F.4th 14 at 55-56, that is not what is at issue here. For California, there is no conflict between 15 the NVRA and the state law because the NVRA does not require the production of 16 unredacted documents in the first instance. See id. (holding that a state ban on the 17 publication of the voter file interfered with the NVRA’s public disclosure 18 provision, but noting that redactions of sensitive voter information are consistent 19 with the NVRA); Arizona v. Inter Tribal Council of Ariz., Inc., 570 U.S. 1, 9 (2013) 20 (holding that the NVRA preempts state election law only insofar as the two are 21 inconsistent). Put simply, a desire for unredacted voter records, untethered from 22 any law, does not translate into a federal mandate. See Oklahoma v. Castro-Huerta, 23 597 U.S. 629, 642 (2022) (“The Supremacy Clause cannot ‘be deployed’ ‘to elevate 24 abstract and unenacted legislative desires above state law’”) (citation omitted).

25 Finally, Plaintiff does not dispute that reading the NVRA to require 26 disclosure of Social Security numbers would “create[] an intolerable burden” on 27 the right to vote. Opp’n to Intervenors’ MTD at 15-16 [Dkt. 81] (quoting 28 Greidinger v. Davis, 988 F.2d 1344, 1355 (4th Cir. 1993)). It nevertheless tries to

1 limit that reasoning to Social Security numbers. Greidinger—cited in Project
2 Vote/Voting for Am., Inc. v. Long, 682 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 2012) [hereinafter 3 “Project Vote”]—did not strike down a law that conditioned voting on the release
4 of Social Security numbers merely because they are Social Security numbers. 988
5 F.2d 1344. Rather, the court recognized that requiring disclosure of such individual 6 identifiers would violate privacy interests protected under statutes like the Privacy
7 Act and the Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”). Id. at 1353-54. The Privacy 8 Act and FOIA, like California’s voter privacy law, also protect other universal 9 personal identifiers, including driver’s license and state ID numbers. 5 U.S.C.
10 § 522a(a)(4) (defining “record” under the Privacy Act to include an “identifying 11 number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual”); 5 12 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (exempting from disclosure “information of a personal nature 13 where disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal 14 privacy”). Forcing disclosure of either such types of identifiers would thus impose 15 the same “intolerable burden” on the right to vote that the Project Vote and 16 Greidinger courts recognized. Project Vote, 682 F.3d at 339; Greidinger, 988 F.2d 17 at 1355. That the Attorney General is the requester does not change the statute nor 18 the analysis: the NVRA’s public disclosure provision, 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i)(1), 19 applies equally to the public and the Attorney General.

20 II. THE UNITED STATES FAILS TO STATE A LEGAL CLAIM UNDER TITLE III OF THE CRA

21 Nothing in Title III creates a special, truncated proceeding or shields the 22 Attorney General’s demand from ordinary judicial scrutiny. Indeed, in a closely 23 analogous statutory scheme, the Supreme Court held that a similarly worded 24 enforcement statute required courts to apply standard civil procedures and to ensure 25 statutory prerequisites were satisfied. See United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 57-26 58 & n.18 (1964). Under current binding law, the Court must evaluate whether 27 Plaintiff complied with Title III—including whether it has followed procedural 28

1 requirements (like making a proper demand with its basis and purpose) and whether 2 the evidence sought is relevant and material to its investigation. See United States
3 v. Golden Valley Elec. Ass'n, 689 F.3d 1108, 1113 (9th Cir. 2012). Plaintiff's 4 reliance on a single, outdated and out of circuit case, Kennedy v. Lynd, 306 F.2d 5 222, 229 n.6 (5th Cir. 1962), to overstep all judicial process is misguided. Plaintiff
6 also misrepresents that case. Indeed, Lynd is insightful for other purposes, 7 including that the "statement of the basis and purpose" is a requirement for any 8 such request and that "basis" and "purpose" are distinct requirements under the 9 statute. Lynd at 229 n.6. Plaintiff's assertion that its Title III demand is above 10 judicial process, Opp'n to Defs.' MTD [Dkt. 81] at 11-12, is simply wrong.

11 A. Plaintiff has failed to comply with the statutory requirements for 12 records requests under Title III of the CRA.

13 In its opposition, Plaintiff fails to address the fact that it has not provided a 14 statement of "the basis and the purpose" that supports its request for the full 15 unredacted voter file. 52 U.S.C. § 20703. Plaintiff's unrestricted interpretation of 16 Title III would give the Attorney General unfettered investigatory authority, 17 demanding any records, no matter how tangential, into any possible violation of 18 any federal law, however unfounded or obscure. Such an interpretation would 19 render Title III's "basis and purpose" requirement meaningless, underscoring the 20 impropriety of Plaintiff's insisted reading. See United States v. Harrell, 637 F.3d 21 1008, 1011 (9th Cir. 2011) (courts "must 'make every effort not to interpret a 22 provision in a manner that renders other provisions of the same statute inconsistent, 23 meaningless or superfluous'" (internal citation and alteration omitted)). If merely 24 listing any supposed purpose was sufficient to satisfy the demands of the statute, 25 there would have been no reason for Congress to include this as a requirement 26 under the statutory scheme. Instead, Title III requires the Attorney General to 27 articulate both "the basis and the purpose" to support the demand. 52 U.S.C.
28 § 20703. Plaintiff provides neither. Even assuming (which this Court should not)

1 that the Attorney General can invoke Title III on a purpose and basis that is 2 divorced from protecting individuals' rights to register and vote—Plaintiff's 3 purported basis and purpose here fail to meet statutory requirements. First, Plaintiff 4 cannot credibly argue that it satisfied the statutory text by providing a statement of 5 "the basis and the purpose" along with the request to California. 52 U.S.C. § 20703.
6 And indeed, Plaintiff never even makes such an allegation in the Complaint. See 7 generally Compl. [Dkt. 1].

8 Second, Plaintiff's post hoc claimed purpose for its CRA request—assessing 9 the State's list maintenance efforts—is incompatible with the sweep of the 10 requested information. The State's compliance with the NVRA and HAVA is 11 assessed by reviewing the State's procedures—not by examining the private 12 information of individual registrants at a single snapshot in time. See, e.g., Pub. Int.
13 Legal Found. v. Benson, 136 F.4th 613, 624-25 (6th Cir. 2025); Bellitto v. Snipes, 14 935 F.3d 1192, 1205 (11th Cir. 2019). California has already demonstrated that its 15 procedures comply with federal law. See Cal. Elec. Code §§ 2193, 2201, 2205-06, 16 2220-27; related regulations and guidance; Brudigam Decl. Exs. 4, 8 [Dkt. 37-2].
17 Plaintiff, by contrast, has not alleged a single deficiency in California's list-18 maintenance practices. Compl. ¶¶ 53, 63.

19 Plaintiff's asserted "basis"—questions about California's EAVS
20 responses—is equally unmoored. Plaintiff never identified this supposed basis 21 when requesting the data, and its July 10 letter never referenced Title III. Brudigam 22 Decl. Ex. 1 [Dkt. 37-2]. The issues Plaintiff raised have nothing to do with 23 protected personal identifiers like Social Security and driver's license numbers.
24 Plaintiff fails to explain how any perceived gaps in EAVS reporting justify a 25 demand for unredacted records of 23 million voters. Despite this mismatch, 26 Plaintiff asserts that its basis is "not open to judicial review." Opp. to Defs.' MTD 27 14 [Dkt. 63] (citing Lynd, 306 F.2d at 226). But Title III requires the basis—not 28

1 merely “a basis”—and that basis must be real, articulated, and tethered to the 2 records demanded. Plaintiff has met none of these requirements.

3 B. Any records disclosed under Title III of the CRA should be 4 redacted to protect the constitutional rights of voters.

5 Nothing in Title III of the CRA requires States to disclose sensitive personal 6 information to the federal government. Even if Plaintiff made a valid demand under 7 Title III with a statutorily sufficient statement of its basis and purpose, the sensitive 8 personal information it seeks would remain protected by California and federal law 9 from disclosure—even to the federal government. As with the NVRA, there is no 10 conflict between the state and federal schemes—California’s Election Code, Cal.
11 Elec. Code § 2194(b)(1); Cal. Gov’t Code § 7924.000(b)-(c), and the CRA both 12 seek to protect individual voters’ right to vote. See Atlas Data Priv. Corp. v. We 13 Inform, LLC, No. CV 24-4037, 2025 WL 2444153 at *2-3 (D.N.J. Aug. 25, 2025) 14 (finding state law limiting disclosure of personal information not preempted by the 15 NVRA). Furthermore, at the time the CRA was enacted, the records subject to 16 disclosure to the Attorney General were not required to contain Social Security 17 numbers or other sensitive identifying data, voter data could not be electronically 18 transferred, compounded, or shared, and the Attorney General was not yet subject 19 to the Privacy Act of 1974. The current reality is that the vulnerability of electronic 20 data, particularly sensitive personal identifiers, cannot be overlooked or 21 compromised without a very compelling reason, which both federal law and state 22 law recognize. See, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (exempting private records from 23 FOIA disclosure); 5 U.S.C. § 552a(b) (establishing protections for personal 24 information held by the federal government); E-Government Act § 208, 44 U.S.C.
25 § 3501 note (purpose of law to “ensure sufficient protections for the privacy of 26 personal information . . .”); Cal. Elec. Code § 2194(b)(1). For this reason, courts 27 have struck the correct balance, allowing for redactions to ensure voters’ privacy 28 protection and safety, while allowing for less sensitive data to be reviewed where

1 necessary. See, e.g., Project Vote, 682 F.3d at 339; Bellows, 92 F.4th at 56. In 2 attempting to counter arguments about its failure to comply with federal privacy
3 law, Plaintiff gives the game away: citing an internal policy about data collected 4 directly from individuals. See Opp. to Intervenors' MTD at 14 n.7 [Dkt. 81] 5 (indicating the policy applies to “the information you provide through this form”).
6 Here, the information being sought is not being sought directly from the individuals 7 whose data is at issue but from the State of California, underscoring both the 8 inapplicability of Plaintiff's cited policy and its failure to comply with the Privacy 9 Act, which makes clear that federal agencies “shall . . . collect information to the 10 greatest extent practicable directly from the subject individual,” 5 U.S.C.
11 § 552a(e)(2).

12 Here, Plaintiff provides no justification that warrants release of every 13 Californian voter's sensitive personal data. The balance between election oversight 14 and avoiding unnecessary violations of individuals' privacy must be met. At the 15 very least, this means Plaintiff's demand for unredacted sensitive voter data 16 pursuant to Title III of the CRA must fail.

17 III. THE UNITED STATES HAS WAIVED ANY OPPOSITION TO 18 DISMISSAL OF ITS CLAIM UNDER HAVA

19 In opposition, the United States offers nothing to counter Intervenor's 20 motion to dismiss its HAVA claim. As such, this claim must fail. See Vien-Phuong 21 Thi Ho v. Reconstrust Co., 669 F. App'x 857, 859 (9th Cir. 2016) (“litigants waive 22 arguments by failing to raise them in an opposition to a motion to dismiss” (citing 23 Shakur v. Schriro, 514 F.3d 878, 892 (9th Cir. 2008)). Nothing in the HAVA 24 provisions cited in the Complaint allows the release of millions of voters' sensitive 25 personal information, including driver's license numbers, state identification 26 numbers, or Social Security numbers. Nor does the United States explain why any 27 such personal identifiers would be relevant to assess California's compliance with 28 HAVA.

Unable to ground its demands in the statute Congress enacted, the United States instead relies on broad assertions unmoored from statutory text. But this Court cannot rewrite HAVA to supply the authority the United States wishes it had. As such, Plaintiff's HAVA claims fail as a matter of law and must be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

The Court should grant Intervenor-Defendant League of Women Voters of California's motion to dismiss, [Dkt. 67], pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).
